prospective Indigenous students who are considering attending UB; and facilitating access to university support services for admissions, financial aid, academic advising, career counseling, and new student orientation (to meet the needs of the Indigenous student population).

In this role you will aid in problem solving to help students meet their education goals, converse with faculty as needed, and assist in providing intervention and support for Indigenous students who are experiencing challenges (cultural, personal, financial) that may impact academic performance, including helping students access appropriate community services/resources.

Key responsibilities include but are not limited to:

- Analyze student circumstances and match specified Indigenous students to tailored intervention activities including meeting with students to clarify their needs, challenges, circumstances, and structure a plan for success
- Through assessment and intervention, provide one-on-one assistance when academic difficulties and issues arise related to academic matters or adjustment to university, and advocate on student's behalf where appropriate
- Organize, and when necessary lead, programming that will provide academic support for Indigenous students from a holistic perspective including facilitating training, developing peer mentoring networks, study groups, wellness activities, professional development opportunities, motivation and student empowerment workshops, time management coaching, university transition support, and stress management support
- Liaise with the Higher Education departments of tribal nations and with regional schools serving Indigenous students.
- Provide assistance, especially administrative, in the development of curriculum and degree programs for the Department of Indigenous studies
- Serve as an ambassador at all relevant public events for the Indigenous Studies Department
