Job Description

Auburn University's College of Education is home to innovative thinkers and doers, working together to meet society's education and health challenges. Our thriving research environment equips faculty and students to discover solutions that matter in people's lives. As an R1 institution, Auburn University pursues practical research with real-world impact, with the College of Education engaging in research across a variety of critical areas, including cardiovascular health, mental health and teacher shortages.

To support these broad research initiatives,the College of Education is recruiting a Manager of Research Program Development and Grants. This on-site position will report to the Assistant Dean for Research and will play a crucial role in supporting faculty proposal development and submission. The manager will lead proposal development efforts, serving as the primary contact for all pre-award activities within the college. This role involves collaboration with faculty, administrators, and support staff both within Auburn University and in external settings.
